Millie.

If you are reading this, you made it.

I hope that this letter at least reaches you, I'm trying to keep myself together, but the infection is taking over, I don't know how long I can last, I don't know how long I can write this.

Remember when we were at the mountains, sitting by the crashed plane over the horizon? It was a place where we made our promise, to find that safe place over the border.

I'm sorry that I broke that promise, I wish that I can make it up to you. but by the time you read this, I'll be long gone.

This will be scary for you, but there is no need to be afraid, you are strong, you are a fighter, but most important, despite the rage you had for this unfortunate world, you are enthusiastic.

I'm getting woozy.

Please do me one last favour, whoever reading this...

Put a bullet in my brain.

Document: Transmission of a declined request written by an overseer of a company

Word Count: 195

Dear Mr. Bringston

I have read your request for additional shipment for improved working gear and ration supplies. It was a very touching email.

However, it has come to my attention that your job as operative leader had been lacking as of late. Need to remind you that the minimum quota of our harvest is not met within the deadline, resulting in a decrease in our profits to sell our wares in other colonies.

We do not have the funds or resources to purchase newer equipment or provide improved rations for breaktime meals. Thus, must decline your request.

Due to the failure to meet quota, I have now implemented more restrictions to the period for our daily routine.

Break times will shorten, work time will lengthen, this is in hopes to meet all ends of our daily quota and restore stability of the company.

If you have any questions, complaints, or other requests. Please contact me again, though, I do not want to hear reconsiderations of my decision, it is final and will remain so. My suggestions are to improve your workers and make them more efficient at their jobs.

Kind regards.

-Superior Overseer Frailway.

Document: A biography of fairies written by someone who studies mythical creatures.

Word Count: 302

Fairies

The Myths behind these creatures scattered like wildfire, several sources consider them as imaginary, hence their commonly used name used for 'fairy tale.' But in truth, they are indeed real, as real as everything in this tone.

Fairies are small, humanoid, insect-sized specimen. Female dominant, with males as rare as the creature's sightseeing.

Though they appear similar to human, facial, physical, with minor differences, such as smaller ears, glossing eyes, and a pair of wings similar to butterflies, the pattern fairy wings vary from each specimen. The most common colours are blue, green, orange, and purple. Without proper insight, one could confuse a Fairy with a butterfly.

A Fairy's natural habitat is located high above trees, within the branches and the leaves, living in small huts made out of the trees, all collective to form a 'tree village.' These villages are located in forests that common folks describe being, 'Enchanted' or 'Cursed.'

Much like human villages, their activities are almost similar to the common folk, workplaces in the trees, merchants selling their wares at markets, taking care of their tree as if it were their mother.

According to the myths, some enchanted trees created the fairies, formed using raindrops and a form of magic within the spirit inside the tree, creating life in a tiny being.

To that, it is no wonder fairies are often a rare sight, as they stick to their tree, and rarely go beyond the next tree. Though, there had been strays from time to time, similar behaviour to peasants going travelling for an adventure. These stray fairies go out in hopes to find something valuable to bring back for the tree. Like bring back golden treasure after a long journey.

A handful of these strays were captured and studied, in order to make this very article.
